| Jan 27, 2021

Video Highlights

- Good signage can help protect your workforce from the coronavirus.
- You can find the right sign for almost every situation, from good sanitation and hygiene to practicing social distancing.
- OSHA and the CDC provide guidelines for signage and also allow you to download and print many signs for free.

Signs can help protect employees from the coronavirus by reminding them to mask up, keep their distance and sanitize their hands. Signs can also be used to create one-way walking paths that control workflow and minimize congestion.

All good safety signs are brief and easy to read, use simple text and symbols, give clear direction, are placed where they're easily seen, and can be read from a distance.

There are many great free resources online, and MSC has even more COVID-19 signage solutions to help you find exactly what you need.
